THE HIDDEN PROBLEM

"Every trading ad you see assumes you're free from 9:15 to 3:30, glued to a screen. So you've quietly concluded trading isn't for you — because you have a job."

Or worse: someone convinced you to try day-trading on your lunch break. You got chopped up by every small move, and decided you "don't have the time or temperament." The truth is you were sold the wrong style of trading for your life.

Intraday demands constant attention you don't have. There's another way that doesn't — and almost nobody teaches it to people like you.

A BETTER FIT

INTRADAY TRADING

- ✗ All-day screen watching required
- ✗ 9:15-3:30 availability required
- ✗ Quit your job first

SWING TRADING

- ✓ Plan evenings, manage in minutes
- ✓ Keep your salary as your safety net
- ✓ Patience & process over reflexes

Meet swing trading:
built for people with lives.

Swing trading means holding positions for several days to a few weeks — based on a plan you build when the market's closed and your head is clear.

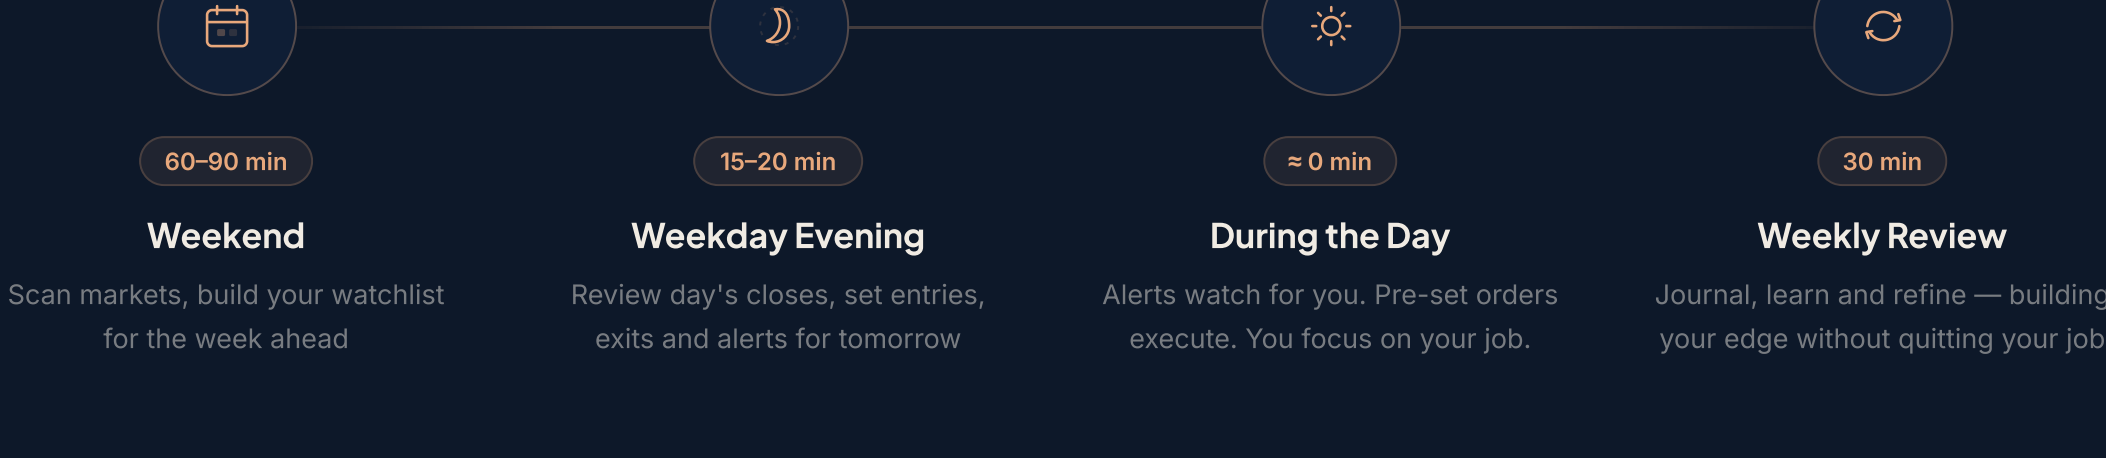

No live screen-watching. No quitting your job. No adrenaline-soaked scalping. You do your analysis after dinner, set your rules and alerts, and check in for a few minutes a day.

It rewards patience and process over reflexes — which is exactly right for a working professional. You keep your salary while you build the skill.

THE METHOD

The Evening Trader System

A weekly rhythm any employed person can actually keep.

Total weekly time | ≈ 2.5 hrs / week | All outside market hours

THE PERSON BEHIND THE METHOD

"I built my trading skill while holding down a demanding corporate job. I know exactly how little time you have — because I had none either."

I spent years working in a demanding professional environment, building my trading knowledge evenings and weekends — exactly like you'll do in this course. I wasn't a full-time trader. I was someone with a job, a schedule, and very little free time during market hours.

Every system in this course was designed with one hard constraint: it has to work for someone who cannot watch a screen from 9:15 to 3:30.

FROM WORKING PROFESSIONALS

"This was made for someone exactly like me."

I'm in IT with zero free time during market hours. Swing trading was the first approach that actually fit my life. I do my planning at night and barely touch it during the day.

I was about to quit my job to "become a trader". So glad I didn't. I kept my salary and learned a real skill, on weekends. This course actively talked me out of a bad decision.
